What's in your bowl?

The White Widow strain is considered as some of the best and strongest cannabis in the world, very high THC content. The buds can have so much THC on them that it can be difficult to see the green color of the bud itself. It is a Indica/Sativa blend which is of medium size and can be grown indoors and out. The High is quite extreme and exhilarating, allowing clear mindedness, without many lethargic or sleepy feelings. The smell is quite strong, and the taste is spicy to sweet.

What is a Feminized Seed?

Feminized seeds, basically have been treated with a hormone, which causes the resulting plant to be 100% female. They are more expensive than other seeds, but this totally takes the guess out of growing...

Good to Know...

There are many types or strains of marijuana, however they basically fit into two categories; Indica and Sativa. Breeders will often cross strains to change the growing or properties of the original.

Indica

As a rule of thumb, generally Indicas tend to be shorter, stockier plants with smaller, denser and smellier buds. Indicas also flower much faster than Sativas, usually with a 6-9 week flowering period.

Sativa

Sativas will grow taller and generally much bigger. Buds will also be bigger but less dense. Sativa buds will also be less smelly and take longer to flower than Indicas, usually 9-10 weeks.

Choosing types of marijuana for a garden will depend on many factors, not least what you expect of the end product. Marijuana strains are often a cross of Sativa and Indica to give properties of each i.e. To make certain Sativa smaller and more potent, or an Indica larger and with bigger buds. As far as the high is concerned, Sativas will tend to produce more of a cerebral, energetic or giggly high, while Indicas produce more of a body stoned, known to enhance physical aspects such as sound and taste and can also have a relaxing effect.
